Helping One Another in Fellowship – Rev. Bryan Jessup

To help one another in fellowship is one of the aspirations of our congregation. But who is included in this “one another?” Might human neighbors around the globe and other living things in the web of life be included in our circle of care? Let’s explore that possibility together.

People Improving Communities through Organizing – Peter Pennekamp

PICO is a national, interfaith network of religious and community organizations. It trains people in a particular method of collaboration that helps them focus on issues and create innovative responses to the problems that face them. The program will be led by Peter Pennekamp, son of Marianne, in collaboration with Wendy Rowan and Bryan Jessup.

February 16 – 10:30 a.m.

Your Ministry, Your Health, Our Shared Life – Rev. Bryan Jessup

One of the five “habits of the heart” that Parker Palmer speaks about in this book, “Healing the Heart of Democracy,” has to do with learning to think, speak and act effectively as a community of people. Of course our individual ability to think, speak and act is the root of this, but even as we work on our individual journeys, we must work and build our shared life together.

February 23 – 10:30 a.m.

Unheard voices: African American and women poets – Pat McCutcheon

As we move from this month honoring Black History to one remembering Women’s History, members of the Fellowship will present poems to affirm these often-silenced parts of our heritage. The choir and music will also celebrate this legacy.
